OMC 2015

FOCUS ON CHANGE: PLANNING THE NEXT 20 YEARS

The availability and affordability of energy represents the major challenge the energy industry will have to face in the next 20 years.

International analysts project that global energy consumption will rise by 40% by 2035, a growth mainly driven by emerging economies and the Middle East set to become the second largest gas consumer. To meet such an increase the industry is expected to invest, according to IEA, a yearly average of 700 billion US$ in the next decade.

Fossil fuels will continue to be dominant, and natural gas will be the fastest growing among them. Since high volumes of hydrocarbons are needed to meet the growing demand and compensate the decline in producing fields, where will the additional volumes come from?

Will the shale gas and the tight oil continue to be a game-changer despite the cost of production and the environmental effects associated?

Once again research and technological innovation for the exploitation of new resources such as light tight oil and ultra-deep water fields along with energy efficiency seem to provide the tools to mitigate energy cost.

These are just some of the thoughts around which we plan to stimulate in-depth discussion. We hope you will join us!

Innocenzo Titone
Chairman OMC 2015

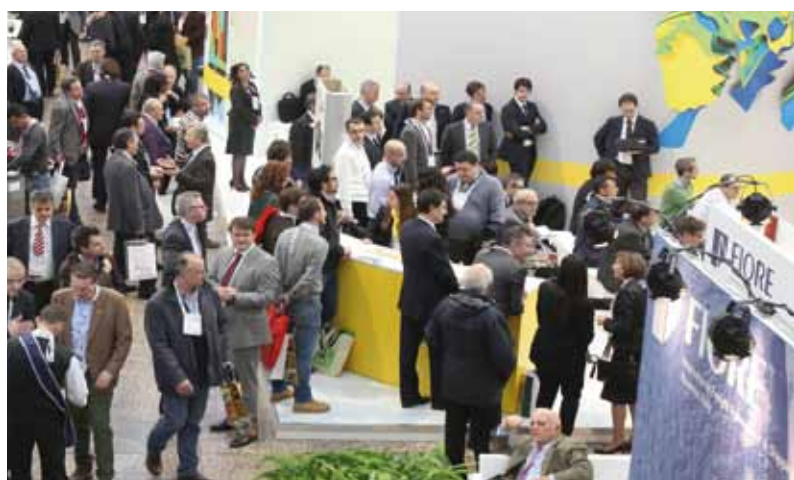

OMC Conference & Exhibition focuses on providing a forum for information and technology exchange, to companies and experts interested in the Mediterranean Oil & Gas Industry.

In its 20 years of activities, OMC has become the Mediterranean meeting point for oil & gas professionals from around the world.
